الخلاصة

Homes, not a front line. The Air Force of Ukraine reports that Kh-101 cruise missiles launched from strategic aviation hit residential apartment buildings in Ternopil, a regional centre in western Ukraine. The blocks stood on Stusa Street and 15 Kvitnia Street.

A toll that rose for three weeks. The police count reached 38 killed, eight of them children, by 8 December 2025; three adults were still missing. The emergency service counted 94 injured, 18 of them children, and pulled 46 people alive from the rubble.

All intended targets were hit.' Russia's Ministry of' Defence named defence-industry and energy facilities and drone storage sites in western Ukraine, did not mention Ternopil, and said the objectives of the strike were achieved.

ما يُظهره السجل

The Air Force of Ukraine reports that Kh-101 cruise missiles launched from strategic aviation hit residential apartment buildings in Ternopil. That night six Tu-95MS and four Tu-160MS bombers launched Kh-101s from over Russia's Vologda and Astrakhan regions.

One missile hit a nine-storey block on Stusa Street, the other a nine-storey block on 15 Kvitnia Street. The Stusa Street building cannot be restored; the 15 Kvitnia building, where two stairwells took the worst of the blast, may be repaired.

MISSILES LAUNCHED FROM RUSSIAN STRATEGIC BOMBERS

The Kh-101 is an air-launched cruise missile carried by Tu-95MS and Tu-160 strategic bombers of Russia's Long-Range Aviation. The Air Force of Ukraine names the bombers' airfields for that night; the crews and the aim points have not been published.

سلسلة المسؤولية

The weapon identifies the platform: Kh-101s are launched only from Russian strategic bombers, which places the launch with Long-Range Aviation units.

A cruise missile flies to programmed coordinates. Two residential buildings are where the missiles struck; an investigation should establish the aim points and the units.

The strike was one part of a night-long attack on the whole country; Russia's Ministry of Defence described the night's strikes as a single operation whose objectives were achieved.
